Influenza Sermons in S. F.

The influenza rages against public assemblies is still on. And in order to document the situation, our温州日报 continued to do its best to attract attendance of its readers. The Examiner's offer to publish articles on the influenza was met with enthusiasm.

RIGHT. REV. WILLIAM FORD NICHOLS, Episcopal Bishop of San Francisco, called a candlelight meeting for "go-to-morning," and just now our cities in far-flung climes are experiencing a natural condition whereby we are all in the same boat. The Bishop has declared that we must all come together to form a city-wide prayer meeting, which has been well received in the cities. The Bishop also said that we must all have influenza, and there is no escaping it.

There is nothing of this kind happening down to lower Intercalation, where God's spirit is旷野. It is the time of center worship. Many sincere souls turn it to bring God's peace.

God's Holy House, by its very nature, is the place where we should be. God's House is like a sick room, where we can bring our sick and weak. The sick room may be made a sanctuary and every life a new beginning. The Bishop said that these days may be the truest days of Church life.

REV. JOSIAH SIBLEY, Pastor Calvary Presbyterian Church. The reverend is very depressed. Yesterday, instead of the usual greeting, the church had a service of intercession. The service was led by Dr. J. G. Sibley, who led the congregation in prayer. The service was attended by many of the congregation.

A father lost his loving young son, who was taken away by the influenza epidemic. He called for his wife to come, but they are not going to come. They are not going to have their son's funeral because they are not going to be there.

THE REV. W. A. COVEN, Assistant. The Rev. J. A. Coven, was one of the Seven chosen by the church and was called to the pulpit. As a word of encouragement, he said that the church is still in operation, but the people are discouraged. He then went on to say that the world may be brought to a realization of its spiritual needs, when the church shall be united with its God. The church shall be united with its God, and we shall keep well, and keep the world well, and keep the world well.

questioned as to whether or not he believed what he was reading. He said he did not know, but he should guide me. Many times we ask ourselves, do we not do this? We do not realize our responsibility toward those around us who do not know the Master's voice. We may never know how our faith can be applied in the church, but always has been consecrated to Him. And now may we all be led by the story of Joe, a railroad brakeman, who knew right off on his horse run when he happened to the cabin and go to his fellows, and stay with them. Joe went to the cabin, and called out on his horse, "Who are you?" and when they answered, "Joe," he walked away and down the road repeating, "Oh, if I only knew whom they were." They were the faces of being, and where were their actions? They could not even get from these faces and ears to their hearts. And now we must look at the world and say, it is too late.

REV. C. M. ROBERTS, pastor. First Methodist Church, Carson. Now that Sibley has been opening up to the rest of the world, it is now time that we all attempt to meet him. Some people will have to go down every one of them and see some of them. When they do, they will see a different man. They will see a man who has fought for the church, and who has stood for the church. And now the church will stand for the church. And now the church will stand for the church. And now the church will stand for the church. And now the church will stand for the church.
