

EPIDEMIC STILL FORCEFUL HERE; ABOUT 120 CASES

The epidemic of influenza, is at a standstill here practically, about the normal number of new cases being reported. Still there are [probably 120 cases in the city at the present time and Dr. Knott says that he believes the apex has been reached, but that more deaths can be expected as the after effects of so many cases of influenza are realized by the patients.

The situation is by no means an easy one to cope with and the officers think the people should be more careful about the quarantine. Cars on the public roads and streets should slow down to avoid making dust when passing each other so that irritation and stirring up of possible germs be lessened.

The Press believes the officials here should put a ban on unnecessary congregating of people at station. It has been absolutely forbidden in Grand Junction by mayor's proclamation.
